Seems you need a chemistry degree to find all the necessary unpronounceable ingredients. My idea of cheese making is: Mix 1 gal of whole milk with 1/2 gal Buttermilk into a large bowl. Leave it alone for 2 1/2 to 3 days until you can leave an indent in the top of this mixture with a wooden spoon. Don't stir. Now place this on LOW heat (less than 125F). Curds will come to the top. Use wooden spoon to cut a few lines to the bottom. When you're happy with the curds, drain the pot thru cheesecloth for a few hours. Dump it back into the pot, Add salt and some Caraway seeds. Mix gently. Place the mixed curds into a cheesebag. (I made one from a pillow case. Tie off the open end. Hang it up for more gravity draining, about 2 hours. Lay it flat, put a board or baking pan on top of it. Weigh it down by placing a water filled gallon jug (Use the original milk jug), and leave it alone for several hours. It will form a beautiful cheese round about 1 1/2 inches thick. Refrigerate. Don't worry how long it will last in the fridge because it will eaten totally in 24-36 hours anyway. I call it Authentic Lithuanian White Cheese.
